TACOMA OFFICE

Attorney Joins One of the Largest Pacific Northwest Family Law Firms

TACOMA, Wash., March 17, 2011 – McKinley Irvin, one of the Pacific Northwest’s largest law firms focused exclusively on divorce and family law, has added Lindsay Smith as an associate in its Tacoma, Wash., office.

Smith’s experience includes family law, child development and training in domestic violence.

“Lindsay’s career focus on family law is evident in her compassion and care for her clients,” said Marc Christianson, partner-in-charge of McKinley Irvin in Tacoma, Wash. “Her ability to empathize with both the parents and children within a family law case is something that cannot be taught, but is honed from experience and sentiment.”

Smith earned a law degree from the Seattle University School of Law, cum laude, and her bachelor’s degree in society, ethics and human behavior from the University of Washington.

Smith is a member of the family law sections of the Washington State Bar Association and the Tacoma-Pierce County Bar Association.
