From her earliest days as a law student, Jayde Logan was drawn to an area of the law where she could help individuals faced with a family crisis.

"I initially considered practicing civil rights or immigration law. However, I soon discovered that family law is important and fulfilling work, and that I can have a direct and meaningful impact on my clients' lives."

Having worked in family law for five years, Jayde identifies with her clients' cases on a personal level. She is able to empathize and understand their perspective on the family issues they confront. She offers emotional support, in addition to diligently addressing their legal needs.

As a mother, Jayde is especially passionate about cases involving children. She feels most gratified when she can reunite parents and children.

Originally from Colorado, Jayde and her family lived in Texas and San Diego before moving to Tacoma. Outside of the office, Jayde spends her time chasing after her two-year-old son, trying new recipes, and traveling to foreign countries.
