As Law Practice Managing Partner, Laura Sell is responsible for training and mentoring members of the McKinley Irvin legal team, consulting with individual lawyers on complex and cutting-edge cases, serving as the firm's human resources point person, and overseeing new attorney recruitment. With all of this on her plate, Laura insists she relishes the challenge.

"Family law is such a crucial area of practice," she notes, "because it's 100 percent focused on the most important aspects of people's personal lives: their family, children, income, and assets. Representing clients in this arena is a weighty responsibility."

Laura contends without equivocation that her McKinley Irvin colleagues are up to the task.

"We hire and retain lawyers who are fully committed to family law, who are excited and energized about their practice, who are accomplished legal practitioners devoted to outstanding client service, and who are dedicated to continued professional growth. Let's not forget that exceptional lawyering is a continuum, not a destination."

A member of the McKinley Irvin executive team since 2017 and whom founder Sands McKinley calls "one of the funniest people I know," Laura retains a fierce loyalty to the firm and the principles for which it stands, all the while invoking her infectious sense of humor and story-telling gifts "to create community and put people at ease."

"We hold a unique place among law firms in this region," she maintains. "We have endured for nearly 30 years because of our commitment to innovating and elevating the practice of family law. We challenge the status quo. We are a leader, both in terms of the way we practice and the quality of all our professionals—not just the lawyers.

"Because of where we are and who we are, we are able to offer unparalleled service to every person we represent."

"Laura is worth her weight in gold! I will always be grateful for her expertise and kindness during a very difficult time in our lives. She is a rock star attorney and I cannot recommend her enough."

"I have worked with many great attorneys in Seattle across multiple legal disciplines. I never thought I would need a family law attorney but when I did, I found the best in Laura. She is very bright, detailed, and can be creative in working through the unique elements of each case. She was exceptional at managing all facets of my case and when needed could be very stern with opposing counsel. She managed my expectations well and knew exactly how to support me through the process. I could not have found a better partner during a difficult time."
